Riot

Based on real people and events, RIOT shines a spotlight on Australia's 1970s Gay and Lesbian Rights Movement and the passionate individuals who, facing ever-present adversity, conceived a celebration of diversity, in what is now a key moment in LGBTQ history.

In the early 1970s, the Australian Gay and Lesbian Rights Movement is in its infancy, as women and men face police brutality, legislative persecution and social shunning.

Lance Gowland (Damon Herriman), a devoted and seasoned activist for various civil rights causes joins CAMP – the Campaign Against Moral Persecution — which focuses on law reform, educating the general public, and providing much needed community support.

Here he meets fellow activists Marg McMann (Kate Box) and Robyn Plaister (Jess De Gouw), Ron Austin (Josh Quong Tart), Peter De Waal (Eden Falk) and partner Bon (Luke Mullins), Sue Willis (Fern Sutherland) and Gabrielle Antolovich (Hanna Mangan Lawrence). CAMP's plans for social change involves engaging with the media and a telephone counselling service. But passionate firebrand Lance wants rallies and protests, he sees the loud and belligerent tactics of his union past as the only way to bring change.

Marg and Lance clash as well as complement each other; they're both natural born leaders, and begin to focus the group's energies on more effective law reform.

During this time, Lance meets Jim Walker (Xavier Samuel), a young, conservative doctor with whom he has little in common, nevertheless they fall in love. While Marg finds herself fighting for custody of her children. University students Peter Murphy (Christian Byers) and Jeremy Fisher (Will McDonald) bring new voices into the activist fray but they all face the continuing threat of job dismissal, violence, and inaction from politicians. Their resolve grows, and by 1978, when the push to decriminalize homosexuality has stalled, they decide to make one final attempt to celebrate who they are.

Securing a permit for a legal protest, on the evening of June 24, in recognition of Gay Solidarity Day, a small but passionate group collect behind a truck driven by Lance, to stage a street party and joyfully declare their pride. The night will be marked by great violence, but the ramifications will path the way for equality, and the establishment of a world-renowned parade that continues to celebrate the spirit of these brave, pioneering men and women.

Grand Designs

The brand-new series of Grand Designs is as engaging and entertaining as ever, and Kevin McCloud is there to share the emotional highs and lows of those willing to put everything on the line to create homes they hope will transform their lives forever.

This series starts with an ambitious upside-down, New Zealand-inspired hill house clinging to a steep slope in Worcestershire – built by a couple who bought the plot on the internet without seeing it first.

After a four-year stint living in New Zealand, ex-RAF pilot Jon and GP Gill Flowers decide to build a Kiwi-style hill house on the slopes of the Malvern Hills. They plan to build an ambitious three-storey home clad in wood and stone, but the pair encounter problems right from the start as the site is so steep builders do not want to take on the job. So, Jon takes another massive gamble and, despite his complete lack of experience, he quits his job and decides to run this tricky project himself. It proves to be an emotional rollercoaster ride, with unexpected challenges, leaving Jon struggling to cope.

Hannah Gadsby's Nakedy Nudes

“The Nude” is one of the most enduring subjects in western art history. It has survived the crumbling of ancient civilizations and the shaming of well-placed medieval fig foliage. Art galleries today are full of nude bodies. Meanwhile, advertisers plunder the nude tradition to activate hidden triggers that convince us that in these undies we will look as fabulous as any Greek God.

How did that happen?

But how nude can a nude really be? Every nude wears multiple veils woven from the threads of context and history. Nudes are dressed in the assumptions of the artists that create them and the cultural periods that shaped them.

In this two-part arts documentary, Hannah Gadsby unravels the apparently simple practice of recreating our own nude human form. Hannah wields her wit and insight like a detective in a TV crime drama with a UV torchlight. Doing so, she disturbs unspoken layers of gender power play and unconscious messaging.

The series walks boldly between artful humour and accessible art analysis. It's an entertaining show, and full of surprises. In true Gadsby style, it gets you thinking even if you only tune in for a laugh. And for those art fans who tune in for their artsy hit, they'll get that through a heavy measure of chuckle.

Short synopsis

Comedian Hannah Gadsby takes a close look at one of the most enduring subjects in western art history – the Nude.

Fleabag

Meet FLEABAG. She's not talking to all of us; she's talking to YOU.

A hilarious and poignant window into the mind of a dry-witted, sexual, angry, porn-watching, grief-riddled woman, trying to make sense of the world.

As she hurls herself headlong at modern living, Fleabag is thrown roughly up against the walls of contemporary London, with all its frenetic energy, late nights, and bright lights, in this very modern mix of fatalism and hedonism, sustaining a merry-go-round of broken dreamers.

Unfettered and unfiltered, Fleabag tears through the series sleeping with anyone who dares to stand too close, squeezing money from any orifice, rejecting anyone who tries to help her, and keeping up the bravado all along. Because that's just the kind of fucked up, normal person she is.

By turns hilarious and heart-breaking, this is the thoroughly disarming confessional of a woman so totally detached, she's utterly lost, and ultimately wondering what the hell she ought to be doing in life. Much like the rest of us.

Starring: Fleabag: Phoebe Waller-Bridge, Claire: Sian Clifford, Godmother: Olivia Colman, Dad: Bill Paterson, Martin: Brett Gelman, Harry: Hugh Skinner, Bank Manager: Hugh Dennis.

In this second episode, haunted by memories of her dead best friend, dumped by her emotionally fragile boyfriend, and now desperately trying to sell her stolen goods, Fleabag attempts to rekindle romantic fires to distract her from the mayhem of her life.

Plebs

It's series three of Plebs and ... one year on in the eternal city...Tempus fugit.

Emperor Augustus Caesar is still the most powerful man in the known world. And languishing somewhere near the other end of the food chain are three lowly plebs: Marcus, Stylax and their feckless slave, Grumio (Tom Rosenthal, Joel Fry and Ryan Sampson).

As the ancestors of 'generation rent', they live in a squalid block in the worst part of town – presided over by the ruthless Landlady (Maureen Lipman). They work dead-end jobs for Rome's third largest grain supply company. And though the Games are in town, they can't get tickets for any event – not even the pig chase.

But an encounter with a fiery Gallic activist, Delphine (Bella Dayne) might at least improve Marcus' romantic stakes. Could she possibly become his Gaul-friend? Or is she just a bit too real for him?

As well as their regular nemeses, this year our Plebs encounter a legion of new Roman recruits: visiting parents (Samantha Spiro, Danny Webb, Steve Edge), a brazen Vestal Virgin (Michelle Keegan), a doping discus thrower (Ingrid Oliver), a theatrical grande dame (Miriam Margolyes) and an ancient weatherman (David Bamber).

Call The Midwife

The wind of change is blowing through Poplar, with a new government paper calling for the eradication of small hospitals in favour of large General Hospitals.

Dr Turner and Shelagh are informed that an inspection of the maternity home will decide its fate - striking fear in their hearts. Yet when they rally the Nonnatus Team to discuss their strategy, they are appalled by Sister Ursula's point-blank refusal to help.

Sister Ursula has her own anxieties about the efficiency of Nonnatus House, and needs all her midwives close by, as she introduces a new 20-minute rule for all antenatal and postnatal house visits. Barbara struggles the most with the new rule, as she is drawn into helping first-time mother Lucy Chen, who is struggling with the Chinese community and to bond with her mother-in-law. But it becomes apparent that Barbara's shortened visit may have led to a serious oversight, when Baby Chen becomes gravely unwell.

Trixie returns to a warm welcome - but is horrified by the state of play at Nonnatus House and serious questions are raised over Sister Ursula's suitability for her role.

Meanwhile, Sister Monica Joan is also tense and agitated and has started disappearing for long periods of time - and there are growing concerns for Sister Mary Cynthia's whereabouts.

Compass (Series Return)

What is confession and is the need to confess an imperative all humans share? In this Compass special, Kumi Taguchi reveals what confession looks like today.

The Royal Commission has called into question the Catholic version of confession and research shows it's a practice with a pre-Christian history. Today, divulging your innermost secrets to a therapist is a form of confession and confession is the cornerstone of a criminal admission of guilt.

Compass hit the streets with the Urban Confessional. Secular hipsters who stand on street corners offering passers-by a friendly ear and the chance to be heard. Andrew Spiteri explains "there's so many distractions in this world that we don't often take the time to really listen to others or listen to ourselves and I think urban confessional teaches people to do that."

Writer Ailsa Piper shares her story on carrying the sins of others, as she trekked across Spain. Walking with the sins of others she understood the need for absolution and forgiveness. "I believe deeply in confession. I think it is us at our most vulnerable if we do it with an open heart and a deep need. I think it's also when I perceive people to be their most beautiful."

Catholic priest Michael Whelan feels a deep responsibility in hearing confession and sharing the pain of his parishioners. "I think human beings respond to an empathic listener, someone who's not trying to take advantage of them, someone who takes them seriously in their situation."
